The development of methodologies for identifying cellular immune responses to a variety of antigens holds promise for understanding how the immune system responds to a specific infection and as a basis for developing strategies for inducing an effective immune response. This report presents the application of an approach, protein microarrays, for in situ screening of immunogenic epitopes. We have designed and constructed protein microarrays using a quartz slide that can be used for the detection and quantitation of interacting proteins and antigen-specific immune cells using fluorescence microscopy. These arrays combine, in one spot, a series of recombinant protein antigens used to immunize animals and a series of soluble antigen-presenting cells used to elicit cytotoxic T lymphocytes (CTL) activity to that antigen in a functional assay. This allows the screening of multiple microarrays from a single animal to determine all CTL responses to a particular antigen. We have tested our assay on lymphocytes from mice immunized with combinations of ovalbumin and a hepatitis B surface antigen (HBsAg). We describe the design, construction, and characterization of protein microarrays. Screening using our arrays is a rapid method for examining antibody and cell-mediated immune responses.Q: Creating a UserControl that updates a portion of a GridView from another UserControl I'm working on an application that is utilizing a GridView for displaying lots of charts and data. My end goal is to have a page that when the user selects a specific chart, they will be taken to another page where they can view the details about that particular chart, including the data and a chart that is being rendered in the GridView.
