Windows Defender is bundled by default with all versions of Windows since Windows Vista; in previous versions, it was an optional download. On Windows Vista and later, it is a default Windows component and is disabled if automatic updates are turned off. Windows Vista: The built-in Windows Firewall cannot be disabled in Windows Vista, so Windows Firewall is not automatically enabled in this version of Windows. Instead, you must explicitly allow applications to communicate with the Internet to "allow exceptions", allowing them to automatically block other security applications such as Microsoft Defender (formerly Windows Defender) that may accidentally block the application.[18] Windows XP and later: Microsoft Defender is disabled by default because Microsoft did not have a legitimate security purpose to prevent Windows Defender from working while installing security updates on Windows XP, which have an elevated security level compared to previous versions of Windows. As a precaution, the administrator can optionally allow Windows Defender to be used so that it can block malicious programs during the installation of updates (refer to the page on Block updates while installing for additional information). Some of the more notable programs within the Windows Defender component include Microsoft Security Essentials, Microsoft Security Essentials Premium, Windows Search, Windows Live Essentials, and Windows Firewall. Nowadays Windows is the most used operating system. As per data research by W3Schools.com, the most used operating system right now is Windows. Windows 10 accounted for 26.54% of the operating systems which run on various devices, whereas Windows 7 was the second most used operating system. And the third most used operating system is Windows Vista. At the end of 2019, Windows 10 is now the most used operating system. File Downloads Windows Defender is bundled by default with all versions of Windows since Windows Vista; in previous versions, it was an optional download. On Windows Vista and later, it is a default Windows component and is disabled if automatic updates are turned off.
